Jung Institute of San Francisco. The collection documents Dr. Henderson's involvement with ARAS, the Archive for Research in Archetypal Symbolism, the C.G. Jung Institute of San Francisco, the Journal of Analytical Psychology, as well as his relationships with various colleagues and friends including Kay Bradway, Virginia Beane Rutter, Murray Stein, Michael Fordham, and Thomas Kirsch. Biographical note: Joseph Lewis Henderson was born on August 31, 1903 in Elko, Nevada. He spent his childhood in Elko, but traveled east to attend Lawrenceville School in New Jersey in 1919, and later Princeton, where he earned his bachelor's in French literature in 1927. Joseph relocated to San Francisco after graduation and found work as a drama critic and book reviewer for two small magazines. During this time he became acquainted with Jung's work, and at the urging of his friend Peter Baynes, as well as Drs. James and Elizabeth Whitney, travelled to Zurich to spend one year in analysis with Jung. He arrived in Zurich in the fall of 1929. During this pivotal year, he engaged in dream analysis and began to pursue more in-depth research in the areas of culture and initiation. By 1930, he decided to attend medical school and enrolled at Saint Bartholomew's Hospital in London. He married Helena Cornford, daughter of Francis Cornford, the English classics scholar, in 1934 and their only daughter, Elizabeth, was born in 1936. He received his medical degree in 1938 and relocated to New York where he opened a private practice. Dr. Henderson published his first paper, "Initiation Rites" in 1939 and left New York for San Francisco one year later.

In San Francisco he joined the Analytical Psychology Club where he was reunited with Dr. Elizabeth Whitney and his fellow student and friend from Saint Bart's, Joseph 'Jo' Wheelwright. During the War years, Dr. Henderson worked at the Veterans Rehabilitation Clinic at Mt. Zion Hospital evaluating returning military personnel from the South Pacific. Jo Wheelwright was also on the staff and their friendship deepened. In 1943, Henderson and Wheelwright led the effort to establish a Medical Society of Analytical Psychology. Its founding members included Elizabeth Whitney, Lucile Elliot, and Horace Gray. At the end of the War, Joseph moved his practice to the Wheelwright's building at 2206 Steiner Street in San Francisco where he would remain for the next thirty years.

During the decade of the 1950s, the Hendersons traveled to Europe every two years and visited with Jung regularly. Jung encouraged Dr. Henderson to continue his research on initiation, archetypes, and culture. In 1962 Joseph was elected vice-president of the International Association for Analytical Psychology (IAAP). He gave up this position voluntarily in 1965 so that he could continue his clinical practice and writing. During this period, Dr. Henderson also co-authored a book, Man and his Symbols, with Jung and three other Jungian scholars; he was the only non-Zurich native asked to contribute to the text.

In 1967, Dr. Henderson published Thresholds of Initiation, which represented the culmination of many years of research on archetypes, culture, and initiatory rites and symbolism. Cultural Attitudes in Psychological Perspective, Henderson's exploration of Jung's theories and practice and his own theory of cultural attitudes, was published in 1984.

In his later years, Dr. Henderson deepened his involvement with ARAS, the Archive for Research in Archetypal Symbolism. He had been involved with ARAS from its beginning in the early 1950s, but contributed greatly to its development into a national organization in this later period. Dr. Henderson was also active in the Society of Jungian Analysts of Northern California and the C.G. Jung Institute of San Francisco which he helped establish. He was President of the Society and the Institute in 1967-1968 and again in 1972-1973. He served on the Institute's Certifying Board from 1967-1971.

At age 100, Dr. Henderson worked jointly with Dyanne Sherwood to publish Transformation of the Psyche: The Symbolic Alchemy of the Splendor Solis (2003). He continued to see patients until his retirement in 2005. Dr. Henderson died peacefully on November 17, 2007 in Greenbrae, California at the age of 104.
